

EDUCATOR SUMMIT @ INDIECADE

IndieCade Educator Summit

IndieCade, in partnership with Game Level Learn, presents the first ever IndieCade Educator Summit, a summit designed for secondary school teachers and university professors to help them learn both best practices for teaching students how to develop games and innovative methods for using games as learning tools across a broad range of subjects.

Date: October 12, 2019

Time: 10:00AM - 4:00PM

Location : Santa Monica College/ CMD
1660 Stewart Street, Santa Monica CA 90404

Admission includes both summit tracks, facilitated networking, and Saturday admission to the IndieCade Festival and NightGames!!

One Ticket - Attend Either Track, or Both!

The lecture content of the two tracks are staggered (Games in Your Classroom in the morning and Game Development in the afternoon), so you can choose to attend lectures for both tracks.

Your ticket also includes admission to the Festival and NightGames!

GameDev Track Teaching Game Development

Learn proven methods for teaching game development from professors at some of the best university game programs in the world, including the University of Southern California, Michigan State University, and the University of Utah.

Faculty with decades of experience will share the exercises, assignments, and other teaching strategies that they have found work best to introduce students to these game development topics.

Gamification Track Using Games in your Classroom

Forward-looking educators with well-established track records for using game based learning and gamification strategies in their classroom will share their knowledge.

Learn how other educators have integrated table-top games, role playing games, escape rooms, and even gamified assessment into their curricula.

This track includes a two-hour Gamified Learning Workshop dedicated to both advice and plan building.
